

Sharing

P. L. Lattuada M.D., Ph. D.

“Sharing” is a fascinating word, it recalls scenery of brotherhood, fire circles, lost ages such as the golden age, or awaited ages, such as the age of aquarium; it speaks the goddess’s language, the language of perennial philosophy, of transpersonal community.

To honour the sharing circle is a hard journey, a personal one starting and ending in front of our ordinary life. The way we look at our neighbour, we face an outrage or a failure, and the way we answer to a call for help or an unexpected effort.

It starts and it ends here and now, when life with the requirement of the world outside put us in front of our courage to dare, to choose confidence and to go beyond fear, choose opening instead of closing, letting go instead of retaining, selflessness instead of self-interest.

Ah, self-interest.

Organizing and participating to a meeting encouraging a culture of sharing means restless warning to our heart calling for responsibility to remember to put the general interest before personal one, the purport before the profit, the dream before the need.

So, people from the transpersonal movement, let start from ourselves, let us do what is on our duty to honour the meeting in Milan.

Until now we have fifty abstract, others are interested but are still missing. As we should not go over sixty delegates there is not much space left so hurry up. Our intent is to give a chance to everybody. Now it is up to you.
